Future of Irrigation.

Elwood Mead, the irrigation expert of the department of agriculture, has not always displayed the best judgment in dealing with some phases of irrigation in the west, but in predicting a great expansion of the irrigation industry in the next few years he is on sound footing. It is his belief that there are few sections in the United States which would not be made more prosperous by irrigation at certain seasons of the year, and in the middle states and in the south he looks for quite as great an advance as has been witnessed in the arid west. He returned from a trip abroad a few days ago, and speaking of what he saw and of the future of irrigation, he said:

"I am coming home strengthened in my belief that irrigation has a wide field of usefulness in in the eastern part of the United States, and that it will be adapted wherever water can be had and distributed at reasonable cost. Especially is this true of the southern states, with their long, hot summers. In Italy $6,000,000 has been spent on one canal system to water a country where the unirrigated fields are as green and luxuriant today as the prairies of Iowa and Illinois.

But they are not nearly so opulent in vegetation as the irrigated fields near by. The crops grown are corn, wheat, hay and mulberry leaves, all except the last are products of our middle state farms. It pays. The irrigated farm is far more valuable than the unirrigated one."—Phoenix Republican.

While opening a box, J.C. Mount, of Three Mile Bay, N. Y., ran a ten penny nail through the fleshy part of his hand. "I thought at once of all the pain and soreness this would cause me," he says, "and immediately applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm and occasionally afterwards. To my surprise it removed all pain and soreness and the injured part were soon healed." For sale by St. Johns Drug Co.
